THE WORD THIS WEEK

In our Lenten progress through the history of God's people, we come to the crucial moment of the revelation of God's name to Moses. This is a decisive moment, because to give your name to another is a sign of trust and friendship. Someone who has your name has a degree of power over you in all kinds of ways, so you give it only to those you trust. The Hebrews, descendants of Abraham, are at a low point, a mere rabble of oppressed immigrants, lacking land or security, marked out for extermination by a powerful bureaucratic state. It is as if God had waited for this moment to raise them up, to create them as a coherent group with a leader who could stand up for them in God's name. God does not yet give the meaning of the name; perhaps 'I am who I am' even means 'You mind your own business'. It is something to do with Being, and the Greek translation of the Bible understands it as 'Pure Being', 'the One who Is'. In the Hebrew Bible the meaning of the name is given later, on Sinai, after Israel's worship of the Golden Bull, when God passes before Moses crying out the name, 'The Lord, the Lord, a God of mercy and forgiveness.' This is the meaning that will echo down the Bible in passage after passage.
